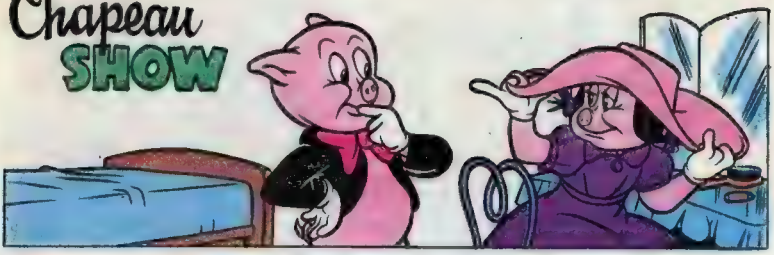
The Chapeau SHOW



"Oh, I'm so worried about this hat contest," Petunia Pig fretted as she tied a pink bow on the pink hat that lay on her sewing table.

Porky Pig grinned confidently. "I think your hat looks great, Petunia—like a sure winner!"

"But, Porky, the ladies in my club are so talented. Every year they come up with the most sensational hats." Petunia frowned. "I just wonder if my hat is unusual enough."

"If looking like a big scooped-out bowl is unusual, I'd say your hat is a success," Porky chuckled.

"You think this hat is crazy-looking, but you should see some of the others," Petunia protested. "One lady last year had a little bird cage on her hat with a real live bird in it!"

"Wowie-zowie!" Porky blinked.

"Another had a prize-winning hat made from a funnel, two glass jars, and a bicycle pump!" Petunia said, as she re-tied her pink bow for the seventh time.

"Ha! Ha! That is funny!" And Porky laughed so hard he had to hold his sides.

"Now you can see why I want my hat to be so different that everyone will notice it," Petunia declared.

"Don't worry. With that overgrown bowl on your head, you will be the talk of the club. In fact, I'm so certain," Porky smiled, "that if you don't win, I'll eat your hat."

Petunia giggled. "Since you think it's that good, I won't worry. But speaking of eating, I must get busy and fix a fresh green salad for the luncheon they have after the hat show."

"Is there anything I can do to help?" Porky volunteered.

"Not now, but as soon as I finish the salad, you can carry it over to the club room for me." Petunia glanced at the clock. "My, time is getting short!"

In the club room, later that afternoon, Porky stood holding the salad as Petunia finished adjusting the hat on her head.

"Petunia," Porky whispered, "where should I put this salad? My arms are getting tired and I . . ."

"Oh, Porky," Petunia interrupted, "the judging is starting now. I'm so excited and fluttery! Is my hat on straight?"

"Yes, it's on straight," Porky grunted, "but where can I put this salad, I . . ."

"Goodness me!" Petunia gasped. "Here come the judges this way."

"Gee," gulped Porky, "I'd better scram out of here now . . . OOPS!" As he stepped backwards, Porky slipped. The salad he was carrying flew into the air and came crashing down—tomatoes, lettuce, carrots, and radishes—into Petunia's big bowl-like hat!

"My hat!" Petunia cried. "What have you done to my hat?"

As Petunia began to sob, the judges stopped before her. "Girls," said the head judge, "now here is the first really fresh idea we've seen today—a fresh green tossed salad hat!"

"How clever!" another judge shouted. "I say let's make Petunia Pig the winner, right here and now."

"Hooray for Petunia!" the judges cheered.

"B-But," Petunia stammered. "Well...thanks."

That evening, after Petunia and Porky returned to her house, Porky giggled, "Remember, Petunia, I said that if your hat lost, I would eat it? Well, I know it won, but since tossed green salad is my favorite, I'd like to eat the hat, anyway." So he did.
